LET US PRAY

Lord, unless I am able to trust the ordinary, the commonplaces of my life, I will surely miss your all enveloping presence.
You are where I am at every moment, at this very moment.
Let me breathe in your presence and feel your warmth wherever I am, whatever I am doing.

~Thomas Merton

His truth and his love pervade all things as the light and heat of the sun.
~THOMAS MERTON

Dramatic moments come and go. We return from the sea to the city. We leave the forest for the streets. We exchange serenity for the confusion of our homes, classrooms, and workplaces. Wonder and awe, joy and pain give way to exasperation and frustration. Clouds obscure the sun. The baby cries. The old man complains. The traffic snarls. The quiet, prayerful end of the day gives way to morning. Sunday passes. Monday dawns.

Our lives go on. So if we are to find God it will have to be where we are at any given moment-not just in the bright, glowing times and places when the world is a very special place or in the worst of times when he seems our only and last refuge, but in the ordinary, confining, demanding, and rarely dramatic days of our lives.
